The company had to be disbanded and most of its assets were seized, after it was discovered that the company was heavily involved with corruption. The tycoon's political involvement is believed to have had some effect on the government's decision to freeze the assets of some of Russia's largest businesses, including Gazprom, which led to a fall in gas prices and, in turn, rising inflation. In February 2004, Yevushenko was arrested and accused of embezzlement, tax evasion and money laundering. He was subsequently granted a pardon. Years of Being Vladimir Putin In 2009, Putin was appointed prime minister. One of his first major actions was to put forward Alexei Kudrin as Finance Minister. Kudrin had been a government adviser for over 25 years and was considered a pro-market liberal, a position that sat well with Putin. Kudrin was eventually made the central bank's first deputy chairman and would become a very influential adviser to Putin. In 2013, however, Kudrin was forced to resign due to his opposition to the decision to raise the retirement age. In 2014, Putin appointed Kirill Dmitriev, a Russian investor, as head of the New Development Bank, a major Russian investment body. It's believed that he is a senior member of Putin's inner circle and that Kirill has helped to facilitate the rise of Putin's political powers. The challenges of being Putin He was re-elected to the presidency in 2012. And he was re-elected again in 2018. To many, his greatest achievement has been in stabilising the situation in the country and ensuring it doesn't descend into civil war. He has dealt with the tensions that arose following the breakup of the Soviet Union, with a variety of business groups in Russia at odds with each other. This in turn has increased the country's problems with corruption and crime. For Putin, however, it's a very successful legacy. The legacy of Putin Kremlin and the government officials' son-in-law and the head of the Public Chamber, Kirill Dmitriev, sit at the top of the table. They are all involved with the Kremlin and Putin's inner circle. Why? Because they are all the ones who have a 82157476af
